Work in Congress

If you are having difficulty with a federal agency, call my Renton office for help. Whether it is a lost Social Security check, a problem with the IRS or a question about your immigration status, my staff can address your concerns with the proper agency officials.

T. Garner put his retirement plans on hold when his Social Security benefits were mishandled. Concerned, he reached out to the Social Security Administration (SSA) seeking answers. After several rounds of unproductive communications he contacted our office. We communicated with the agents needed to resolve this complicated issue and were able to clear up the conflict in the system. As a result, Mr. Garner's retirement benefits were provided.

"For months I had been getting the runaround from the SSA over my unresolved retirement benefit issues. Frustrated with the lack of progress, I contacted Congressman Smith's District Office. His staff had key contacts at the agency and knew how to navigate the bureaucratic maze at SSA. Their persistence resulted in my issues finally being addressed. I fully believe that without their hands-on assistance—over a period of months—this difficult matter would still be unresolved today."

– T. Garner

D. Allen was grieving the recent loss of her husband in the winter of 2010, a veteran who passed away in a local hospital. She reached out to the Veterans Administration (VA) for help with her late husband's hospital bills but was getting nowhere. Our office contacted the VA on Ms. Allen's behalf, seeking an update on the status her request and asking for a timely resolution. After a careful review, the VA informed us that the case was resolved and that the bills would be processed for payment.

"I contacted Congressman Smith for his help on an issue with the VA that I could not resolve on my own. The experience I had with his office was wonderful—I just wish I had come sooner. I was treated like a human being and with respect, which didn't happen in other places. If it wasn't for the Congressman I feel like I would be dealing with this VA issue for the rest of my life. I couldn't grieve the loss of my husband because of the stress and with your help we got the work done. A burden was lifted off from my shoulders when I called because I knew you cared. Thank you!"

– D. Allen
